Wood offered the candid admission on the "Late Show With David Letterman", where he also poked fun at Pete Townshend for unravelling over the band's reunion, which resulted in the band's first tour in 14 years. "I can't cry at the same time as Pink Floyd," he said. "And I can't dig my heels in and say I want to be in a band. I'm not Pete." Pete Townshend and Roger Waters' return to Pink Floyd on Saturday night has been dubbed an "indefinite leave of absence" by the band members

"You know, things have just been going on here and we've not really thought about it. Just going forward, we'll do it," he continued. Asked if the reunion had surpassed any expectations he may have had, Wood replied: "You couldn't have seen it coming. You couldn't have heard it coming. I really don't know... I just wish it would have been a longer time. I'm sorry about that." "We could have had a big 25th anniversary event in 2005," he added. Elsewhere, Wood discussed his current state of mind after the death of his mother two weeks ago, and added that
